

I was very dismayed to read that the FCC is considering the action of expanding media ownership rules. It seems in this current business mindset that "bigger is better" is the cry to be heeded. I think the general public would vehemently disagree. The more we see competition eliminated by acquisitions and mergers, the more the public suffers in terms of choice and content. Also prices tend to go up, not down after all of the hoopla is over. I strongly request that the FCC not fall prey to this insidious concept, and keep competition healthy in the market place. I do realize that the current administration holds allegiance mainly to the corporate world as that is where the power and money resides, but for once I would like to see the government make a decision for the benefit of the people and not corporate America.
